

Fortunate, written by Egidio Concas
& Valentino Nioi
- edited portfolio excerpt -

EXT. LESLIE'S HOUSE - DAY

NATHAN, 32, rides up on a bike, still in yesterday's Mall Cop uniform, the misterious cube in his jacket pocket. He's been on duty all night, fired this morning, and he has nowhere else to go.

INT. LESLIE'S HOUSE - KITCHEN - CONTINUOUS

LESLIE, 30, janitor, lifelong best friend, pulls a tray of fresh cookies from the oven. He sets two cups of Earl Grey down.

Nathan drops the cube on the coffee table between them. Leslie's cat slinks over and rubs its head against it - excited, like it's catnip.

LESLIE
You think the Russians dropped it?

NATHAN
Why would the Russians drop anything in this shithole of a town? You're the sci-fi guy. Why do you think I'm here?

LESLIE
We were the sci-fi guys. What happened to you?

Nathan shows his wedding ring.

LESLIE (CONT'D)
(CONT'D)
You met her at a Trekkie convention. Spare me.

Nathan digs a battered 70s laser pointer from Leslie's old Tech Kids bag - childhood junk they've apparently kept. He plugs it in. Points it at the cube.

The beam bends mid-air and gets sucked straight into the cube.

LESLIE (CONT'D)
You're defying gravity like a goddamn Jedi.

Nathan drops it. The cube drinks the remaining light from the room. Semi-darkness. The cat bolts through the window – and hits the ground outside, stiff as a board.

Then: a beam from the cube projects a door-shaped panel, freestanding in the kitchen. At its center, a square hollow – the exact size of the cube.

LESLIE (CONT'D)
We're about to die, right?

NATHAN
Yes.

Nathan fits the cube into the hollow. The panel opens.

INT. BLACK AISLE / CUBIC ROOM – CONTINUOUS

A matte-black corridor, edges glowing. Cold. Very cold. It opens into a cubic room with a monolithic table at its center.

Nathan and leslie decide to get in.

LESLIE
Are we going to die?

NATHAN Probably.

LESLIE
Good.

END OF EXCERPT